Breaking Down Body Language

Did you know that up to 90% of the meaning of what we say can be found in the nonverbal, or unspoken, part of it? This is why it is so important that we understand how to use body language ourselves, and how to understand other people's body language.

Body language is the way we use our body to communicate without words. It can be broken down into facial expressions, gestures, and posture.

Facial Expressions

Facial expressions are how we use the muscles in our face to show emotions and feelings.

Eyes - Wide eyes with raised eyebrows can mean the person is very interested or feeling surprised. When someone's eyebrows point down and inward, they are usually feeling angry or upset. Blinking often or not blinking at all can mean that the person is lying.

Mouth - When people turn their mouth up it can mean they are happy; while turning their mouth down can mean they are sad. Pursed lips, which are lips that are tightly closed, can mean a person is feeling angry or annoyed. Biting of the lip could mean a person is nervous or worried.

Gestures

Gestures are movements made with body parts, such as a person's head, legs, arms, and fingers.

Some examples of gestures include using thumbs up or thumbs down, nodding, pointing, or waving.

Beach Season Begins

Carlos had been anxiously awaiting the first beach day of the summer since spring, and it was finally here! As his parents packed up the car, he and his brother sat on the front stoop of his apartment building. They were both of them waiting for what seemed like forever as his parents stuffed the trunk full of enough stuff to entertain them for an entire week.

The trunk also finally had time to get down the back of the car. Carlos peeked out from the side of the car. There it was! The beach. As they time they came he's.

Once they reached the beach, Carlos felt a drop of his neck. He searched longingly from his window for even a sliver of the ocean peeking out from behind the lush trees.

After parking came the most difficult part: lugging all of the belongings onto the beach. As they trudged through the parking lot, Carlos was thinking that he wished they had more time to spend at home.

Marta looked out the window longingly at the beach. She wished she could go to the beach today.

Before long, a red pickup truck carefully pulled into her driveway. The driver smiled and her mouth turned into a smile. She jumped up in excitement with her arms in the air.

Sam's mom poked her head into his bedroom door and her mouth quickly turned down. She glared at him. "You need to clean this room. It is a disaster!" Sam looked up from his bed. He pursed his lips, narrowed his eyebrows, and crossed his arms. It took everything in him to simply say, "Okay, mom!"
