Scales of Memory Justin Collings,2021-01-05 Since the Second World War constitutional justice has spread through much of the democratic world Often it has followed in the wake of national calamity and historical evil whether fascism or communism colonialism or apartheid Unsurprisingly the memory of such evils plays a prominent role in constitutional adjudication This book explores the relationship between constitutional interpretation and the memory of historical evil Specifically it examines how the constitutional courts of the United States Germany and South Africa have grappled respectively with the legacies of slavery Nazism and apartheid Most courts invoke historical evil through either the parenthetical or the redemptive mode of constitutional memory The parenthetical framework views the evil era as exceptional a baleful aberration from an otherwise noble and worthy constitutional tradition Parenthetical jurisprudence reaches beyond the evil era toward stable and enduring values It sees the constitutional response to evil as restorative rather than revolutionary a return to and reaffirmation of older traditions The redemptive mode by contrast is more aggressive Its aim is not to resume a venerable tradition but to reverse recent ills Its animating spirit is not restoration but antithesis Its aim is not continuity with deeper pasts but a redemptive future stemming from a stark complete and vivid rupture This book demonstrates how across the three jurisdictions the parenthetical mode has often accompanied formalist and originalist approaches to constitutional interpretation whereas the redemptive mode has accompanied realist and purposive approaches It also shows how within the three jurisdictions the parenthetical mode of memory has consistently predominated in American constitutional jurisprudence the redemptive mode in South African jurisprudence and a hybrid parenthetical redemptive mode in German constitutional jurisprudence The real world consequences of these trends have been stark and dramatic Memory matters especially in constitutional interpretation

Persistence of Race Nina G. Jablonski,2020-02-25 This is the third and final group of essays emerging from the discussions of the Effects of Race Project at the Stellenbosch Institute for Advanced Study STIAS that occurred in 2016 and 2017 The authors consider the biological and social understandings of race and how new information from both the biological and social sciences is changing our perspective on the nature of the human condition including the association of biological and social phenomena with race They also look at global events or movements which influence these processes in South Africa and the costs of a racialised world order to humans and humanity Phenomena are examined through the lenses of many disciplines sociology history geography anthropology and writing Monument Culture Laura A.

Macaluso, 2019-05-30 Monument Culture International Perspectives on the Future of Monuments in a Changing World brings together a collection of essays from scholars and cultural critics working on the meanings of monuments and memorials in the second decade of the twenty first century a time of great social and political change The book presents a broad view of the challenges facing individuals and society in making sense of public monuments with contested meanings From the United States to Europe to Africa to Australia and New Zealand to South America and beyond the contributors tackle the ways in which different places approach monuments in a landscape where institutions and ideas are under direct challenge from political and social unrest It also discusses sharply changed attitudes about the representation of history and memory in the public sphere The goal is to acknowledge shared experiences through a wider perspective to contribute to the work of the world wide heritage community and to document the history and shifting cultural attitudes towards monument culture across the world encouraging a more informed approach to monuments and their meanings especially for the public and those outside of academia Leap 4.0.
