

4. When a patient's family asks why their chronically mentally ill adult child is being discharged to a community-based living facility, the nurse responds:

a.	"It is a way to meet the need for social support."
b.	"It is too expensive to keep stabilized patients in acute care settings."
c.	"This type of facility will provide the specialized care that is needed."
d.	"Being out in the community will help provide hope and purpose for living."

ANS: D

Hospitalization may be necessary for acute care, but, when patients are stabilized, they move into community-based, patient-centered settings or are discharged home with continued outpatient treatment in the community. Concentrated efforts are made to reduce the patient's sick role by providing opportunities for the development of a purposeful life and instilling hope for each patient's future. Although social support is important, such a living arrangement is not the only way to achieve it. Although acute care is expensive, it is not the major concern when determining long-term care options. Community-based facilities are not the only option for specialized care.

5. What is the best explanation to offer when the mother of a chronically ill teenage patient asks, "Under what circumstances would he be considered incompetent?"

a.	"When you can provide the court with enough evidence to show that he is not able to care for himself safely."
b.	"It is not likely that someone his age would be determined to be incompetent regardless of his mental condition."
c.	"He would have to engage in behavior that would result in harm to himself or to someone else; like you or his siblings."
d.	"If the illness becomes so severe that his judgment is impaired to the point where the decisions he makes are harmful to himself or to others."

ANS: D

When a person is unable to cognitively process information or to make decisions about his or her own welfare, the person may be determined to be mentally incompetent. Providing self-care is not the only criteria considered. Age is not a factor considered. The decision is often based on the potential for such behavior.

Assessing a chronically abused individual for anxiety call should attention to the psychiatric disorder that could develop from the abuse.
