investment are essential to maintain the debt to GDP ratio on a firmly declining path This requires shifting the structure of public spending towards investment lowering tax expenditures and tackling tax evasion further building on recent progress Strengthened vocational education and training as well as better recognising prior learning and developing childcare capacity are needed to mobilise larger parts of the working age population and ease high labour shortages and skill mismatches Boosting the rising yet still relatively low level of labour productivity and investment while decoupling of emissions from activity and adapting to climate change are key to achieve sustainable rise in living standards Further strengthening competition reducing the regulatory burden and improving access to skills and financing would support firm growth and innovation A mix of investment regulations and emission pricing would help achieving net zero emissions by 2050
