

THE INDUSTRIAL REVOLUTION

The Industrial Revolution was a very exciting period in history; in fact there was a large and rapid change in technology. It lasted for over 100 years. It began in Great Britain in the middle of the 18th century and spread to Europe and the Americas by the early 19th century.

The Industrial Revolution can be divided into two phases: First industrial revolution and Second Industrial revolution.

Many of the first innovations began in the textile industry. Products were made in big factories by machines instead of by hand in small workshops.

Steam power played an important role in this period. James Watt invented the steam machine in 1769 and was also used in railway engines.

The Second Industrial Revolution took place from the mid-1800s to the early 1900s. In this period large factories and companies began to use more technologies to mass produce goods. Important innovations in this phase include the use of electricity, the production line and the Bessemer steel process.

Bessemer invented the method for converting iron into steel.

CULTURAL CHANGES

The Industrial Revolution brought many cultural changes. People moved to the cities to work in factories. Cities grew and became overcrowded and polluted. In many cities, poor workers lived in slums with their families in awful conditions and lack of basic sanitation.

TRANSPORT CHANGES

Before the Revolution people travelled by horse, walking, by boat. New ways of travel were introduced including railroads, steam boats, and automobiles.

WORKING CHANGES

Although the Industrial Revolution brought many innovations, there were some problems with the conditions in the factories. Workers had to work very long hours in dirty conditions and child labor was a common practice. In fact they were employed to do the worst jobs.

There was no health assistance and their wages were low.
