Welch,1991-03-30 A Dan Josselyn Memorial Publication Anthropologists have long talked about chiefdoms as a form of sociopolitical organization and for several decades Elman Service s description of chiefdoms has been widely accepted as definitive Nevertheless in the 1970s scholars began to question whether all or any chiefdoms had the entire range of characteristics described by Service Most of the questions focused on the nonmarket economic organization of these polities and several contrasting economic models were suggested None of the models however was comprehensively tested against actual chiefdom economies This study examines the economic organization of the late prehistoric A D 1000 to 1540 chiefdom centered at Moundville Alabama Rather than attempting to show that this case fits one or another model the economic organization is determined empirically using archaeological data The pattern of production and distribution of subsistence goods domestic nonutilitarian goods and imported prestige goods does not fit precisely any of the extant models Because Moundville s economy was organized in a way that promoted stability it may be no accident that Moundville was the dominant regional polity for several hundred years This research opens a new field of archaeological investigation the relationship between fine details of economic organization and large scale political fortunes Puducherry Home Guard

Welch,2006 One hundred years of archaeological excavations at an important American landmark the Shiloh Indian Mounds archaeological site a National Historic Landmark The Shiloh Indian Mounds archaeological site a National Historic Landmark is a late prehistoric community within the boundaries of the Shiloh National Military Park on the banks of the Tennessee River where one of the bloodiest battles of the Civil War was fought in April 1862 Dating between AD 1000 and 1450 the archaeological site includes at least eight mounds and more than 100 houses It is unique in that the land has never been plowed so visitors can walk around the area and find the collapsed remains of 800 year old houses and the

900 meter long palisade with bastions that protected the village in prehistoric times Although its location within a National Park boundary has protected the area from the recent ravages of man riverbank erosion began to undermine the site in the 1970s In the mid 1990s Paul Welch began a four year investigation culminating in a comprehensive report to the National Park Service on the Shiloh Indian Mounds These published findings confirm that the Shiloh site was one of at least fourteen Mississippian mound sites located within a 50 km area and that Shiloh was abandoned in approximately AD 1450 It also establishes other parameters for the Shiloh archaeological phase This current volume is intended to make information about the first 100 years of excavations at the Shiloh site available to the archaeological community
