Saturday: "The Art of Dr. Seuss: A Retrospective and National Touring Exhibition" runs 10 a.m.-6 p.m. daily, Saturday-Aug. 17 at Modern Gallery, 629 Broadway, San Francisco 94133 (S.F.). www.sfmoma.org/seuss was the "Wrong Side of the Street" that depicts a cigarette-smoking, pool-playing killer wearing a beret and a wide-brimmed hat.

Geisel was born in 1904 in Springfield, Mass. After graduating from Dartmouth College in 1925, he went to Oxford University for a doctorate in literature, mostly to please his father. However, Geisel didn't complete his doctorate and later joked that he added "Dr." to his name in shame because his father always wanted one in the family and he'd send his father a lot of money by just calling himself a doctor rather than going to medical school.

Geisel was where he met Helen Palmer, whom he married and who had suggested he become an illustrator.

Upon returning from Europe in 1927, Geisel began submitting articles and cartoons to publications, including Life, Vanity Fair, the Saturday Evening Post, and a humor magazine called Judge. But most of his income came from his "cat in the hat" series, which he wrote and illustrated. "And to think that I live in an ordinary house," which was reported more than 20 times before a friend at Vanguard Press published it for him, where it went on to moderate success.

Geisel served in the Army Signal Corps during World War II, where he learned animation and developed a series of training films featuring a character called Private Snafu, for which he won the Legion of Merit. During this period, he also created documentaries like "The Story of the United States" and "Design for Creativity" and a cartoon called "Geisel's Living Thing," which also won him an Oscar.

In 1959, after Life Magazine published a report on literary aging schoolchildren, two publishers, Houghton Mifflin (now part of Hachette) and Random House, bought up and asked Geisel to write and illustrate a children's primer using only 22 "basic words" vocabulary words. Just months later, "The Cat in the

But" was published. It became an instant success.

According to one of the most famous Seuss legends, in 1960 publisher Bennett Cerf of Coward-McCann told Geisel that he couldn't write an entire book using only 55 words. Seuss wrote "Green Eggs and Ham," but Cerf, disappointed, never said the word.

In 1967, Helen Geisel died. In 1968, Theodor Geisel married an old friend, Audrey Stone. Several years after Geisel's death in 1991, Audrey Geisel began making some of his unpublished private art work available to the public.

The Seuss exhibition features a rare first look at a manuscript of the book "The Sneetch and the Snottos," which would be one of the last works of Geisel's that he wrote. It is a rare look at Geisel's work as a writer and as an illustrator.

William W. Dwyer, the exhibition's curator and well-known "Seussologist," devoted seven years to researching and putting together the project, which includes works from the London House Museum, Presidential Library.

"Geisel single-handedly shaped a new genre of art that falls somewhere between the Surrealist Movement of the early 20th century and the inspired nonsense of a child's dreamworld," Dwyer said.

Only a Grinch could disagree.
