Abstract: A 10-year-old boy with a 12-month history of progressive weight loss, abdominal pain, and diarrhea was found to have a small intestine resection specimen with a 1.5-cm polypoid lesion. The lesion was composed of a proliferation of bland-appearing, columnar epithelial cells with a small, hyperchromatic, and irregular nucleus. The cells were arranged in a pseudostratified columnar pattern. The lesion was surrounded by a dense inflammatory infiltrate. The findings are consistent with a juvenile polypoid lesion of the small intestine.
