

Table 2: Theory: Characteristics of Infection

These four exemplar studies demonstrate the characteristics of a group, allowing for a more detailed understanding of the role of individuals going through the experience. This can be used to determine several traits present, or even which group to address that shows higher rates of success, or just greater.

Exemplar studies were also examined using computational power which generated the graphs shown above. These graphs are structured to show the relationship between 'Infection' and 'Time' through various simulations. In each, the red line represents the relationship between 'Infection' and 'Time' through various simulations.
