

was even smaller than bacteria and could cause infection. But he did not use the word 'virus' and he thought that the 'something' was probably a chemical. In 1898, a Dutch scientist called Beijerinck did further work on this subject and decided that 'viruses' were a liquid. It was some years later that an American scientist, Stanley, proved that they were very small particles.

Note that progress was slow because microscopes were not yet able to 'see' very small things such as viruses.

There is a new species of frog in the rain forest. It is called the 'rain forest frog'. It is a small frog with a green body and a red back. It has a long tail and it can jump very high. It is found in the rain forest of the Amazon.

Look for these features in the students' answers.

- An appreciation of the importance of using several specimens to study, because of variation within a species, but that studying too many of the frogs might endanger the species, especially if these are not returned to their natural habitat.
- A clear, simple description or list of what evidence the scientists should collect. This could include information about observable features, such as coloration, measurements of body parts, behaviour and perhaps a study of its genes, and that these should be compared with the same features in other similar frog species. Some students might also suggest studying the tadpole, to see if they differ in any way from the tadpoles of the other species.
- Reference to the ability of this frog to breed with known species of frog to produce fertile offspring.
- Suggestions about how the scientists could use their information to test their hypothesis that the frog belongs to a new species, such as investigating whether the newly-found frogs can breed with other similar species, as well as making a detailed comparison of their appearance with these other species.
