The Evolution of the Computer

You may not remember a time before computers, the Internet, and email, but their invention is really fairly recent.

---

ENIAC, an American computer made to calculate how far an object could be projected, was fifty feet long!

Early Computers

Computers were originally created to help solve difficult problems and calculations quickly. Early inventions, however, modern computers have already been used to make calculating easier. In 1930, Vannevar Bush created The Differential Analyzer. It is one of the first modern computers. It could solve difficult problems for physics and engineering that usually took a long time to calculate. However, it could only solve one kind of equation.

The Invention of the Personal Computer

For a long time, computers were used by scientists and businesses only. Even the inexpensive models could cost several hundred thousand dollars. Eventually smaller versions were created for scientists to buy for personal use, but they were still too complicated for the general public. As computers got smaller, hobbyists began to take interest. One company began selling kits to assemble your own computer. Later, a company called Apple, started by two young hobbyists, began to sell directly to the general public. In 1982, a
