The Water Cycle

Water flows through various pathways on our planet, shaping landscapes and sustaining life. The amount of water on Earth always stays relatively the same – it just moves from one area of the Earth's surface or atmosphere to another. Have you ever wondered how water moves from oceans to clouds to rivers and back again? That journey, known as the water cycle or hydrologic cycle, is driven by two powerful forces: the energy of the Sun and the force of gravity.

Evaporation

The water cycle begins with the warmth of the Sun heating up bodies of water such as oceans, lakes, and rivers. This heat makes some of the liquid water turn into a gas called water vapor, rising into the air. This process is called evaporation. As water vapor is added to the air, it increases the atmosphere's moisture content, or humidity. Humidity is a measure of the amount of water vapor present in the air. Warmer air can hold more moisture than cooler air, so humidity levels tend to be higher in warm and tropical climates.

Sublimation

Sometimes, water vapor can enter the atmosphere directly from a solid object, such as ice, through a process called sublimation. This often happens in cold, dry climates where the sun is strong.

Precipitation

Clouds continue to build up as more and more water vapor condenses. Eventually, the cloud droplets or ice crystals grow large enough to overcome the upward air currents that keep them suspended in the atmosphere. When this happens, the droplets or crystals begin to fall from the cloud due to gravity. Depending on the temperature and the amount of water, such as rain, snow, sleet, or hail, this is called precipitation.

As water falls to the Earth's surface, it can collect in bodies of water or infiltrate the ground. The water that infiltrates the ground may fall as rain, where the water conditions, the precipitation reaches the ground. Other types of precipitation include snow, sleet, and hail, which forms when water droplets freeze together.

Water can also move from the ground back into the atmosphere through evaporation and sublimation. Following the rain and snow, the water can move through the ground, infiltrating the soil and replenishing the groundwater. This is called infiltration. The water that infiltrates the ground can then move back to the surface of the land, the top of mountains and buildings, and into the atmosphere through evaporation and sublimation.
