Mrs Eckdorf in O'Neill's Hotel William Trevor, 2019-05-21

The denizens of a crumbling Dublin hotel are the subject of a meddling photographer in this Booker Prize shortlisted masterpiece Irish Times Once a flourishing establishment O'Neill's Hotel has fallen on hard times The same could be said for the people who live there Among them are Mrs Sinnott the elderly deaf and mute proprietor her drunkard son Eugene Morrissey a small time pimp and the grim lone porter O'Shea But what might sound bleak to some holds irresistible allure for globetrotting photographer Ivy Eckdorf Hearing stories of O'Neill's Hotel from an ocean liner barman Eckdorf catches the unmistakable whiff of human interest Surely some tragic story hides within this crumbling corner of Ireland Now she intends to uncover that story frame it just so and turn it into her next coffee table book Though she has no connection to these hard luck souls she has arrived And no one's life will be the same not even hers An astounding richness of pathos humour and tragedy Francis King A small work of art that reaches antic heights The New York Times
