

Case Study: ADNOC's Takreer takes the low-impedance path to complete tank safety with Consilium and Lightning Eliminators

For tank storage firms, the risk of a lightning-induced fire event is too potentially damaging to bear. Floating tank storage facilities that have millions of dollars' worth of product can be destroyed with a single spark. Even worse is the downtime such an event will cause: a possibly lengthy period of investigation and reconstruction that impacts a storage facility's ability to deliver product to market and generate revenue.

Last year, Takreer, a storage and refinery subsidiary of the Abu Dhabi National Oil Company (ADNOC), completed a thorough lightning protection analysis and began transforming its protection profile for floating roof tank storage. Dozens of tanks, while operating efficiently, had potentially faulty lightning protection systems in place: metal shunt and wire systems that are meant to direct charge in the case of a lightning event but are prone to fall into disrepair over time.

"Because Takreer is a very safety-conscious company, they called us and Lightning Eliminators & Consultants, Inc. \(LEC\) for a better lightning protection solution," said Manoj Nambiar, General Manager of Consilium, Middle East Fire Protection and Safety operations. "As a company that handles high volumes of storage, Takreer has to be very progressive about making sure their facilities are protected."

Consilium Middle East \(FZC\), which sells and installs fire protection solutions to many of the major oil and natural gas companies throughout the region, started offering LEC's Retractable
