

76. It is possible that in the early stages of conversion there may be instances of fans standing on the seats or in front of them because they are used to standing or in order to register a protest, but I am satisfied that in England and Wales as in Scotland and abroad spectators will become accustomed and educated to sitting. The evidence I have received shows that more recently, where seating has been installed, the fans have come to accept and like it. At Ibrox Park, for example, the seated areas are the most popular and tickets for them sell in preference to those for standing. Significantly, trouble from misbehaviour and physical injuries have been reduced since most of the crowd became seated. Such trouble and accidental injuries as still occur are primarily in the remaining standing areas. It is planned to convert them to seating in the near future.

Sir Norman Chester Centre Research

77. The Sir Norman Chester Centre for Football Research, attached to the University of Leicester, is funded by the Football Trust. In November 1989 the Centre undertook a survey of registered members of the Football Supporters' Association to discover the views of committed football fans on a number of the issues after Hillsborough which are covered in my Report. The extension of seating was one such issue. Numerous questions were asked on a number of different hypotheses. The Report states that substantial majorities in the sample were in favour of maintaining the status quo on the seats/terraces balance at their own clubs. However, the Report continues:

"53.6% claimed they would actually support the drive for more seating (sic) if they were reasonably priced and covered. The addition of these last two points - concessions on price and cover - also seemed to have dramatic effects in reducing levels of opposition to the prospects of all-seated facilities as we shall see later".

When all-seating was put to the sample there was a majority against it, but the Report goes on:

"Finally, and perhaps significantly, opposition in our sample to the introduction of all-seated facilities diminishes considerably when one introduces provisos on price and protection from the elements. When this is done, more people in our sample support all-seaters than oppose them."

Europe

78. The trend towards seating is even stronger in Europe and is now being driven by decrees of both national and European football authorities.

79. In Italy the imminence of the 1990 World Cup competition has forced the pace of progress. The Italian Ministry of the Interior decreed on 25 August 1989 that for open air facilities with a capacity of more than 10,000 spectators at football games and for covered ones with a capacity of more than 4,000 spectators no standing will be allowed after 30 April 1990. Those facilities must have only numbered seats each not less than 0.45 metres wide. The San Siro stadium in Milan will by then seat 85,000 spectators; the Olimpico stadium in Rome will seat 87,000.

80. In Holland, Utrecht's ground built in 1982 has seating for 12,000 and standing room for 8,000. The club already intended to convert the latter to seating. However, on 6 December 1989 the Dutch equivalent of the FA (the KNVB) agreed with the Dutch clubs to cut the standing capacity of football grounds by 10% each year over the next decade so as to render football stadia in the Netherlands in effect all-seater at the end of the 1990s.

81. In following this phasing Holland's policy is in accord with a resolution presently under consideration by UEFA (Union des Associations Européennes de Football). The resolution proposes that for the 1990/91 season only 80% of the standing tickets may be sold, that figure to be reduced every season by 10% until 1999.

82. FIFA (Federation Internationale de Football Association) passed a resolution on 26 July 1989 providing that as from the preliminary competition for the 1994 World Cup (starting in autumn 1992) "matches may in principle only be played in all-seater stadia". The resolution went on "as from 1993 it will be the duty of the Confederations and National Associations to hold high-risk matches in their zones only in all-seater stadia." High-risk matches are defined under UEFA Regulations as follows:

- I All UEFA final and semi-final ties of the UEFA club competitions as well as final tournament matches of the European Football Championship.
- II When declared as such by UEFA on the basis of previous incidents of supporters of one or both teams or of other exceptional considerations.
