Durkin, Gregory E. Elliehausen, 2014 Consumer Credit and the American Economy examines the economics behavioral science sociology history institutions law and regulation of consumer credit in the United States After discussing the origins and various kinds of consumer credit available in today's marketplace this book reviews at some length the long run growth of consumer credit to explore the widely held belief that somehow consumer credit has risen too fast for too long It then turns to demand and supply with chapters discussing neoclassical theories of demand new behavioral economics and evidence on production costs and why consumer credit might seem expensive compared to some other kinds of credit like government finance This discussion includes review of the economics of risk management and funding sources as well discussion of the economic theory of why some people might be limited in their credit search the phenomenon of credit rationing This examination includes review of issues of risk management through mathematical methods of borrower screening known as credit scoring and financial market sources of funding for offerings of consumer credit The book then discusses technological change in credit granting It examines how modern automated information systems called credit reporting agencies or more popularly credit bureaus reduce the costs of information acquisition and permit greater credit availability at less cost This discussion is followed by examination of the logical offspring of technology the ubiquitous credit card that permits consumers access to both payments and credit services worldwide virtually instantly After a chapter on institutions that have arisen to supply
