

How You Can Stop Global Warming

Global warming is a term used to explain the steady increase in the normal temperature of the global atmosphere. The change is said to be causing a permanent change in the world climate and its oceans. Generally people argue if global warming is real, a debate that is discussed in every part of the continent but scientists through use of data have proved that global warming is real. These include cutting down trees and use of harmful chemicals in agriculture to control pest and disease lead to global warming. Cutting down of trees reduce absorption of carbon dioxide hence accumulating in the atmosphere. Harmful chemicals destroy the ozone layer as a result of evaporation resulting in global warming (Wheeler & Von, 2015).

Global warming has a number of effects ranging from environment, health to economic that will take place if the world continues with the same trend. The first effect of global warming is a change of habitats (Dai, 2014). Global warming may lead to an extinction of some animal and plant species since their habitat may be destroyed or disrupted. Also, farms and forests may experience new pests, heat waves and increased downpours leading to flooding. The results of all these factors will also destroy agriculture and wildlife.
