STUDY GUIDE QUESTIONS

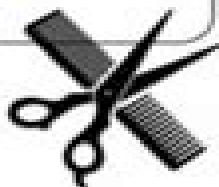

Instructions: You may answer the study guide questions in pen or pencil.

1. Very early on in the story we feel that there is a conflict between the two characters. How do we know that?

- The captain says that he is again only
- We know that the narrator is not on the same side as the captain because he states, "He probably thought I was in sympathy with his party" said.
- We realize that is a clash - the clash that Captain Temon is taking down.

2. We understand the internal conflict in the story, how does that compare with the external conflict of the father?

- He does not the narrator struggles with himself - he does not know what the right decision would be.
- If he kills the Captain would that be a mistake or a hero?

PLOT

Plot Stage	Application
Rising Action During the rising action, the plot starts getting more complicated and the conflict develops. Events in books through a series of complications, incidents which either help or hinder the protagonist in finding a solution. It is all the problems the protagonist experiences before the climax (and to follow).	• Until the climax, the narrator struggles with himself about whether or not he should kill the Captain (internal conflict). • He is hesitant and provides a number of reasons for and against killing Temon. • He doesn't want to kill him because he was being the first to show him the way in regards to Temon's plans. • But he does not want to become a coward, or he knows as a coward. • He also thinks this job may seriously.
Climax The climax is the peak or turning point of the action. It is the point where the protagonist makes a decision or takes an action which will bring about victory or defeat. Basically, this is where the events of the plot change. It's also usually the most exciting part of the story.	• The father decides not to kill the captain. • "You came to me for a share. And I perform my work faithfully... I don't mean blood on my hands. Just letters, that's all."
