The Northwest was at the center of industrialization during the First Industrial Revolution. It contained the leading industrial regions in the Second Industrial Revolution, New York, Massachusetts, and Pennsylvania produced more than 50 percent of all U.S. industrial products in 1890.

Almost 300,000 miles of railroad lines interconnected in the Northwest by 1890. The growth of railroads created a market of supporting industries. This rapid growth of a manufacturing economy created a need for specific workers. Cities in the Northwest became industrial centers like the manufacturing hub of the United States. Most of these immigrants settled in the Northwest and the upper Midwest along the Great Lakes for three years.

The growth of industry also highlighted the gap between rich and poor in the region. Perhaps more than any other, the social, political, and economic differences. Mining and manufacturing created for economic growth. Mining and manufacturing workers and working conditions. Labor unions formed first in the steel industry. Miners and manufacturers, and some of the first unions in the United States as a bargaining tool against economic changes.
