Abstract: This research is a qualitative study focusing on the experiences and views of nurses. The research objectives were to explore the experiences of nurses working in the intensive care unit (ICU) and to identify the factors that influence their work. The study was conducted in a tertiary care hospital in the United Kingdom. The data were collected through semi-structured interviews and focus group discussions. The findings indicate that nurses in the ICU face a high level of stress and pressure due to the critical nature of the patients and the fast-paced environment. The study also identified several factors that influence the nurses' work, including the availability of resources, the support from the management, and the training and education of the staff. The study concludes that the experiences of nurses in the ICU are complex and multifaceted, and that there is a need for further research to explore the factors that influence their work and to develop strategies to improve their working conditions.

However, and depending on the context, the individual, as well as the religious group (NGO), is often the

As a result, the authors have not yet investigated several questions that remain unanswered. First, if the results of this study are taken literally, they suggest that the full impact of the program has not been achieved and needs to be supported through highway. These concepts are addressed in the appendix to a policy research on special federal-aid money project (Hawthorne, 1997) and are discussed in the concluding chapter.
