SECTION A: COMPREHENSION

Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions on it.

Miss Williamson announced in class one day that she wanted one of us to live with her to help her with her domestic work after school. There was a rush to volunteer which took her completely by surprise. When she recovered and had quietened our excited shouting, there was a moment during which none of us dared breathe, as she scanned the eager faces. What made her choose me I have never found out, but I had noticed before that she was partial to me.

“Alright Karimu”, she said. “You can come; but first run along and get your father’s consent.”

My parents were only too glad to have one mouth fewer to feed and my brothers and sisters to see the back of one who inevitably had begun to assume an air of superiority in talking to them. Miss Williamson’s bungalow was a stone throw from the school. That very evening saw me installed on a mat in a corner of her veranda. I was unable to sleep, excited of the thought of the good fortune that had come my way. To be within earshot of Miss Williamson’s English all day, to have access to her books, to nurse the possibility overwhelming even in thought, of going with her frequently to Rofunkti – all these visions kept my eyes wide open and my brain racing until very late that night. With my ‘lapa’ pulled over my head and happy beyond all description in my heart. I smiled myself to sleep.

I learnt a very deal in Miss Williamson’s bungalow. Apart from improving my English, I learnt about the world outside, and began to sense that there were barriers much higher and much less easily gauged than those of mere language and color, between my own people and from whom she sprang. The smiling
