TEK 8.9B: Relate plate tectonics to the formation of crustal features.

Earth's Layers

- To understand how the Earth's crust has been shaped into the mountains and valleys that exist today, we must first look at the layered structure of the Earth, and how leftover heat in the Earth's core, part of Earth's creation 4.6 billion years ago, still provides most of the energy building mountains today. The decay of radioactive elements such as uranium provides the remaining energy.
- Scientists classify the interior layers of the Earth in two different ways: chemically (that is, what the layers are made of) and structurally (how dense and solid the layers are). Both classification systems for the layers are shown below.
- Chemically, the Earth has three layers: the core, made largely of the metals iron and nickel; the mantle, made of dense rocks rich in iron; and the crust, a very thin surface layer made of less dense rocks rich in aluminum and magnesium. The denser ocean crust is mostly basalt, a dense black igneous rock, while the continental crust is less dense rocks like granite.
- Structurally, the Earth has five layers. These layers are affected by both pressure and heat, which both increase with depth. In other words, the center of the Earth has both the highest pressure and highest temperature. Pressure and temperature interact on the different layers, creating an alternating solid-liquid-solid-liquid-solid sequence of layers.

The diagram illustrates the Earth's internal structure. It shows a cross-section of the Earth with labels for the following layers from the surface down: Crust (Oceanic and Continental), Mantle (Upper and Lower), and Core (Outer and Inner). A vertical scale on the right indicates depth in kilometers (0 to 6371 km). A separate graph shows temperature increasing with depth. Labels also point to specific features like the Mohorovičić Discontinuity, 410 km boundary, 660 km boundary, and the Core-Mantle Boundary.
- The innermost layer is the inner core, which is mostly solid iron and nickel, possibly forming north-south oriented magnetic crystals. It has temperatures over 5000°C.
- The outer core is made of the same metals as the inner core, but the lower pressures allow the metals to melt. It is the movement of the metal in the outer core which creates the Earth's magnetic field.
