Zero Hours Contracts in Scotland: Interim Report - HC 654 Great Britain: Parliament: House of Commons: Scottish Affairs Committee, Ian Davidson, 2014-04-10 Zero hours contracts and other forms of casual labour can benefit workers and employers in Scotland but the Scottish Affairs Committee's inquiry has shown that too often the relationship is unbalanced leaving the employer with all of the flexibility and few costs and the worker in fear of dismissal denied access to due rights of employment and in some cases earning less than the minimum wage The Government recognises that poor practice exists and needs to be addressed but the UK Government's consultation on zero hours contracts was too narrow The Government must do more to protect workers who wish to challenge unfair unsafe or unlawful conditions of employment Workers should be told from the outset of their employment what type of contract they are on and a written contract setting out the terms and conditions must follow within two months There should be a minimum notice period of work and workers should not be punished for turning down offers of work made within that period Where workers arrive for work but find none available then the employer should compensate them for the inconvenience Travel time between appointments should be paid and pay for zero hours workers should accurately reflect the number of hours that are worked to fulfil contracted duties The recommendations will improve the working conditions of people on zero hours contracts but the Committee's overriding conclusion is that in the majority of cases zero hours contracts need not and should not be used at all Tobacco Charles A.
