

JASPER JONES Intertextuality

What is a text?

- A text is any piece of writing: a poem, a short story, a novel, a real-life story, a film, a video clip, a message sent on a mobile phone, a piece of writing or film from the internet.

What is intertextuality?

- Intertextuality is the relationship between texts.
- These relationships shape a text's meaning.
- The recognisable echoes of other texts intensify the experience of reading or viewing a text by adding layers of meaning.

What are the types of intertextuality?

- Explicit intertextuality – a reference or quotation to another text.
- Implied intertextuality – where the allusion is more indirect and may occur through a common genre or style.
- Inferred intertextuality – the reader or viewer sees connections between texts that may not have been intended by the writer or director. It may include texts that had not even existed when the text was composed.

Why is intertextuality important?

- Understanding intertextuality leads to a much richer reading experience.
- It invites the reader or viewer to interpret the text in your own way.
- It can bring in other contexts, ideas and stories to the text being read/viewed.
- As new layers of meaning are introduced, there is pleasure in the sense of connection and the continuity of texts and of cultures.
- These connections invite the reader/viewer to engage with a broader range of texts.
- It invites us to re-visit the earlier text, often with new insights into its meaning for our time.
- Intertextuality also raises questions about nature of authorship and originality as texts may be seen as 'composed' from pre-existing elements rather than 'created'.
- It also provides a way for us to compose our own texts drawn from our knowledge of others.

What do we look for in the concept of intertextuality?

Stage 5 – Years 9 & 10	Stage 6 – Years 11 & 12
Tests are recontextualised for different times, modes, media and cultures	Intertextuality is a relationship formed by a composer or responder between and among texts through recognising common features
• Texts are variations on, or borrow from, other texts	• Texts have within them the seeds and resonances of other texts, so becoming interdependent for meaning making
• Intertextuality involves references gained through experience of a wide range of	• Intertextuality involves re-visioning texts for critical and creative purposes
