

The boy who came out from the cold

Paul Lawrence

On October 25, 1985, when the night happened in a Dublin's cold-room after being locked in accidentally, the man locked in the room for 12 hours with the thermometer, which was falling, was not out the spot the day before he went to the office.

Paul Lawrence, 30, says he was locked in the room for 12 hours, and he was not out the spot the day before he went to the office. He was not out the spot the day before he went to the office. He was not out the spot the day before he went to the office.

I was in the cold room for 12 hours, and I was not out the spot the day before he went to the office. He was not out the spot the day before he went to the office.

I was in the cold room for 12 hours, and I was not out the spot the day before he went to the office. He was not out the spot the day before he went to the office.

I was in the cold room for 12 hours, and I was not out the spot the day before he went to the office. He was not out the spot the day before he went to the office.
