Manfred's son Conrad and the Princess Isabella. The wedding does not take place however for Conrad is crushed to death by a giant helmet moments before the event. Among the crowd is a handsome young peasant named Theodore who muses that the helmet is like the one from the statue of Otranto's founder Alfonso. Though he has no reason to truly suspect Theodore of Conrad's death, Manfred makes a big deal about the peasant's putative guilt and imprisons him under the helmet. The death of his son terrifies Manfred that a prophecy that the castle will pass on from their family is beginning to come true. Manfred plots to divorce his wife Hippolita on the grounds that she has failed to bear him a proper heir; he also claims they are related and marry Isabella himself. Even though strange things begin to happen in the castle, Manfred is not deterred. When Manfred tells this to Isabella, she is horrified and flees into a passage beneath the castle. There she meets Theodore, newly escaped from the helmet; he aids her in escaping to a nearby convent.
