Human Reproduction

Human reproduction

Human reproduction is sexual reproduction involving male and female reproductive cells called gametes. The reproductive system includes organs called gonads that produce gametes and hormones; ducts for transport, storage and transportation of gametes; accessory organs and glands for fluid secretion; and internal genitalia. Reproduction is regulated by hormones produced by the gonads, the hypothalamus and the pituitary gland. Fertilisation involves the introduction of sperm into the vagina. The sperm travels through the female reproductive tract until it encounters an ovocyte, a female sex cell. Fertilisation can then take place.

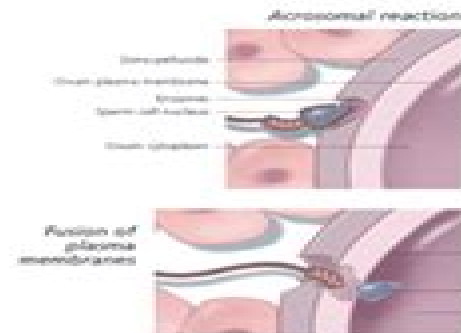

Male reproductive system

The adult male reproductive system is a part of the endocrine system. It consists of the testes, vas deferens, and accessory glands. The testes are divided into two halves, each containing a testis. The vas deferens is a tube that carries sperm from the testes to the urethra. The accessory glands are the prostate, seminal vesicles, and bulbourethral glands.

The testes are located in a scrotum, a skin sac called the scrotum, which provides support and regulates the position of the testes relative to the body. The scrotum is located below the level of the testes, which is a change in external temperature to maintain the proper temperature within the testes for sperm formation.

Spermatozoa are produced within the testes by spermatogenesis, which is a process that occurs in the testes. Spermatozoa are produced in the testes and travel through the vas deferens to the urethra and finally to the vagina and penis, where they are deposited.

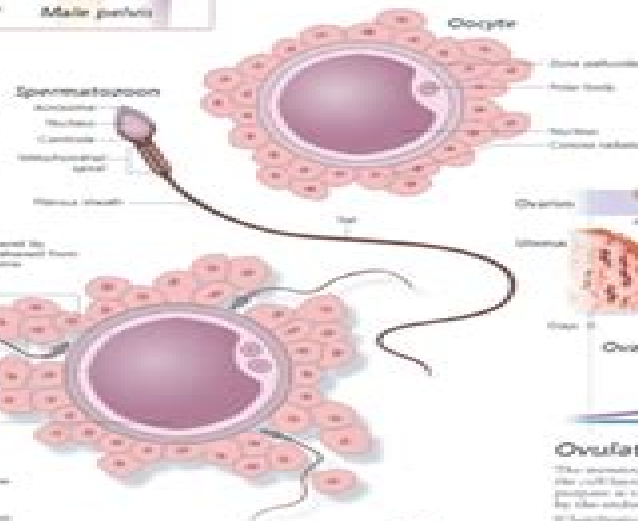

Fertilization

The upper portion of the vagina leads to the canal for fertilisation. Millions of sperm travel through the female reproductive tract, with only a few reaching the egg. When a sperm reaches the egg, it penetrates the egg's outer layer, the zona pellucida, and enters the egg. The sperm then fuses with the egg, and the egg's nucleus and cytoplasm combine with the sperm's nucleus and cytoplasm to form a zygote. The zygote then develops into an embryo.

Female reproductive system

The internal anatomy of the adult female reproductive system includes the vagina, uterus, ovaries and fallopian tubes. These structures form a pathway allowing the release of an egg cell, fertilisation, its growth and delivery of a developed fetus. The vagina is a muscular canal that carries sperm and menstrual discharge. The uterus is a hollow pear-shaped organ with muscular walls that contract during childbirth. The ovaries are the female sex glands, which produce eggs during each menstrual cycle in preparation for implantation by a fertilised egg. This timing is closely coordinated with fertilisation.

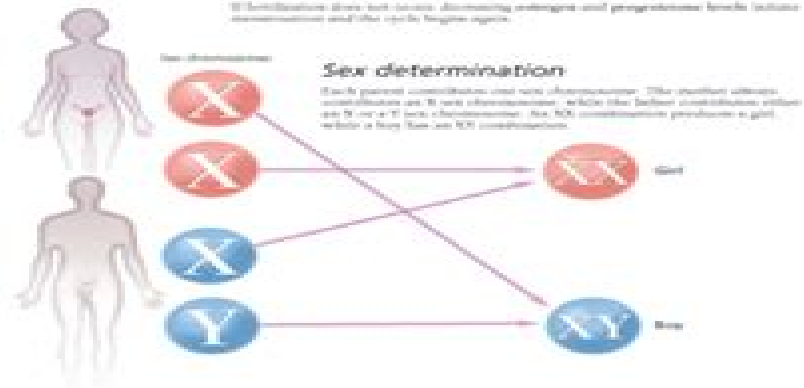

The ovaries, located on each side of the uterus, are responsible for producing eggs as well as the female sex hormones estrogen and progesterone. Estrogen is responsible for the development of the female reproductive system, sexual characteristics, and breast development. Progesterone prepares the uterus lining for implantation of a fertilised egg and is necessary for breast milk production. The ovaries are connected to the uterus by the fallopian tubes, narrow ducts that provide a passageway for the egg to reach the uterus.

Ovulation & the menstrual cycle

The menstrual cycle refers to the sequence of events that occurs in the endometrium, the lining of the uterus. The cycle normally lasts approximately 28 days. The purpose is to prepare the uterus for possible pregnancy. The menstrual cycle is governed by the endocrine system. It involves the release of eggs, increasing estrogen and progesterone levels, and the shedding of the uterine lining.
