Abstract—The authors examined the effects of a 12-week, 100% body weight (BW) resistance training program on the muscle strength, muscle mass, and body composition of 10 sedentary, middle-aged men. The subjects were randomly assigned to a control group (CON) or a resistance training group (RT). The RT group performed a 12-week, 100% BW resistance training program. The RT group showed significant increases in muscle strength, muscle mass, and body composition compared to the CON group. The results suggest that a 12-week, 100% BW resistance training program is effective in improving muscle strength, muscle mass, and body composition in sedentary, middle-aged men.

Abstract—This paper presents a new approach to the design of a control system for a robot arm. The system is designed to control the position and orientation of the arm end effector. The design is based on a model of the arm dynamics and a desired trajectory. The control system is implemented using a digital signal processor (DSP) and a microcontroller. The results of the design are presented in terms of the system response to a step change in the desired position and orientation. The system is shown to be able to track the desired trajectory with high accuracy and to reject disturbances.

These data are the complete set of data for the 1990-1991 season. The data are available for the 1990-1991 season only.

There are several factors that may affect the results of this study. First, the sample size was relatively small, which may have limited the generalizability of the findings. Second, the study was conducted in a single institution, which may have introduced bias. Third, the study was retrospective, which may have limited the accuracy of the data. Finally, the study did not include a control group, which may have limited the ability to draw conclusions about the effectiveness of the intervention.
