The Forest-Atmosphere Interaction B.A. Hutchison,B.B. Hicks,2012-12-06 The effects of meteorological phenomena upon forest productivity and forestry operations have been of concern for many years With the evolution of system level studies of forest eco system structure and function in the International Biological Program and elsewhere more fundamental interactions between forest ecosystems and the atmosphere received scientific attention but the emphasis on meteorological and climatological effects on forest processes remained More recently as recognition has developed of potential and actual problems associated with the atmospheric transport dispersion and deposition of airborne pollutants the effects of forest canopies upon boundary layer meteorological phenomena has come under scientific scrutiny Looking to the future with rising atmospheric concentrations of CO₂ and increasing competition for the finite fresh water resources of the earth interest in the role of forests in global CO₂ and water balances can also be expected to intensify Thus the nature of forest canopy atmosphere interactions that is to say the meteorological phenomena occurring in and above forest canopies are of importance to a wide variety of scientific and social issues Demands for forest meteorological information currently exceed levels of knowledge and given the economic constraints of science in general and environmental sciences in particular chances for major improvements in scientific support in the near future are slim Unfortunately studies of environmental phenomena in and above forests are costly and logistically difficult Trees the ecological dominants of forest ecosystems are the largest of all terrestrial organisms
