Dear Friends of CMP,

What a month! We received official notice from NSF that we were funded and we have met with our advisors - in two parts. We regret that you all could not have the chance to meet each other, but the short notice from NSF prevented us from fixing schedules in time to reach everyone's calander for a common date. On the positive side, there was so much to discuss that having two meetings allowed us to at least touch on most of the important issues that confront us as we begin to write this summer. Our heads are still spinning from the excitement of the creative, thoughtful, enthusiastic discussions at the two advisors' meetings. It is such a pleasure to sit for a couple of days with people who are so positive, who love teaching, who love kids, and who love mathematics.

Over the two meetings we discussed five mathematical strands: Statistics, Probability, Number, Algebra, and Geometry. In addition, we discussed evaluation and assessment and the situations, settings, and applications that drive the mathematics. Most importantly, throughout all of the discussions we kept the need to reach all students in the forefront of our thinking.

After each of the meetings the group of writers began the task of assembling the ideas from the discussions into a plan for a middle school mathematics curriculum. At the same time we discussed how best we might share with you the results of all of our collective thinking. We decided to look at the curriculum through two lenses. One lense is to look at the important mathematics and processes that are embedded in our content strands. A second lense is to look at situations, settings and applications that drive the mathematics at this level. In both of these views a constant check is "will and how does it appeal to middle grade students?". As a result of the discussions with our advisors and our debriefings, we have written descriptions of the mathematical strands that show our thinking at this point. We have also summarized the discussions on situations and settings. These are enclosed for your reactions. We hope you will send us your comments and any ideas that are stimulated by the work so far.

Enjoy the summer and please come to visit us in Wells House on the campus of MSU.

Sincerely,
Betty
