

Nonviolence Movement, South Africa Struggle for New Order

Phillip Manyok, PhD

Abstract: In this case analysis, the writer traced a brief history of nonviolence to teachings of Jesus and Buddha. The goal was to provide readers with basic knowledge and to establish core base of exploring and understanding the intricacies of the struggle in challenging Apartheid in South Africa. In order to achieve that, the writer approaches the study by first discussing three forms of nonviolence that serve as the basis of analysis namely nonviolent protest, noncooperation, and nonviolent intervention. To further put these forms of nonviolence into perspective, the writer utilizes three theoretical frames of analysis: structural analysis of oppression, noncooperation and self-realization theories to analyze the race relationship between whites and blacks in South Africa.

Keywords: Nonviolence, nibbāna, dhamma, apartheid, Satyagraha, national party, African National Congress, Afrikaners, and negotiation.

1. INTRODUCTION

The practice of nonviolence is not new to humanity. Its history goes way back to Buddha, and Jesus time for those who are familiar with these literatures. Some people consider nonviolence as another way of life. Buddha for example centered his teaching on two main principles. The first principle is nibbāna which means freedom from hate, fear and illusion [6]. It is a principle or belief rooted in harmony, cohabitation, loving/kindness for each other, and self-worthiness.

The second Buddha's principle is Dhamma which means path to liberation. Dhamma or path to liberation principle calls for detachment from position of power, authority, ideology, dogmas and scriptures not by force or violence but through reasoning [6]. Dhamma's central belief is that through reasoning, people gradually deepen their understanding of the world and become detached from authority by holding on to their own reasoning or knowledge. Buddha argued that deepening one's own experiences leads to self-autonomy or liberates one from toxic ideas, philosophies, authorities, dogmas and scriptures [6]. Buddha summed up Dhamma or path to liberation in these words:

"Like one whom a poisoned arrow is removed, the student of Dhamma will experience relief from pain, like a cat who eats nourishing food, the student of Dhamma will know the tastes of liberation." Buddha 563-483 B.C.E

In essence, these words implied, for people to be able to liberate themselves from dangerous ideas, they must be willing to seek greater understanding of themselves to gradually acquire knowledge which enables them to enter into a path of liberation. Put it differently, seeking deeper understanding and experience is a lifelong endeavor. It requires practices, self-harmony, honesty, patience, self-discipline, open mindedness, moral character, and disciplined courage. Through his own works and beliefs, Buddha earned himself a place among the founders of modern nonviolence. His call for middle way of living a life of love, kindness, harmony, self-worthiness, intangible power of knowledge, self-discipline and more importantly a moral character are few examples of common characteristics of a nonviolence activist. From a rational perspective, moral character calls for moral responsibility e.g. hating killings, suffering, violence, corruption, and enmity.

Also, the teachings about nonviolence have been practiced by Christians for centuries going back to Jesus days. For example, Jesus taught his followers to practice love and not hate anyone. In 1 John 3: 15 for example, Jesus promoted love over hate by declaring, "Anyone who hates his brother is a murderer." Or in the letter of Apostle Paul to Roman
