Figure 1 illustrates a network structure with nodes and edges. The nodes are represented by small squares, and the edges are represented by lines. The diagram shows a central node connected to several other nodes, with some nodes further connected to each other, forming a complex network structure.

The first of these is the hydrodynamic design of the hull. The hull is the part of the ship that is in contact with the water. It is designed to be as smooth as possible to reduce drag. The hull is also designed to be as narrow as possible to reduce resistance. The hull is also designed to be as long as possible to increase speed.
