Manuscript writing is often considered writing to convey writing. Writing to convey involves a subject for one's words and personal experience to the particular subject that the writer is writing about. This involves a writer to use their knowledge in a way that makes sense to the reader. This is an abstract way of thinking that involves writing for the reader, not for the writer.

Which are correct in this context? There are several options:

- It is incorrect to think anything goes because there is a check-in at the end of the day.
- It is more important to bring anything you need to the check-in to make sure you are not missing anything.
- It is more important to bring anything you need to the check-in to make sure you are not missing anything.
