The impact of humanity on the earth overshoots the earth's bio capacity to supply humanity's needs meaning that people are living off earth's capital rather than its income However not all countries are equal and this book explores why apparently similar patterns of daily living can lead to larger and smaller environmental impacts The contributors describe daily life in many different places in the world and then calculate the environmental impact of these ways of living from the perspective of ecological and carbon footprints This leads to comparison and discussion of what living within the limits of the planet might mean Current footprints for countries are derived from national statistics and these hide the variety of impacts made by individual people and the choices they make in their daily lives This book takes a bottom up approach by calculating the footprints of daily living The purpose is to show that small changes in behaviour now could avoid some very challenging problems in the future Offering a global perspective on the question of sustainable living this book will be of great interest to anyone with a concern for the future as well as students and researchers in environmental studies human geography and development studies Man Talk - The Manual David Hughes, 2015-06-08 David Hughes enjoyed a long career as a secondary school teacher and his pupils used to say of him that although he was not always right by golly he was never wrong He is certainly never one to follow fashions blindly or to accept without thinking the views of those around him He is always prepared to listen carefully to the arguments of others He likes a good debate He is always asking questions Here he expounds the common sense ideas he has formed about humankind and the world of today and he attempts to explain why so many of the changes he has seen during his lifetime have not been for the better NSCA's Essentials of Sport Science
