Banking's Final Exam Morris Goldstein, 2017-05-30 Spurred by the success of the first stress test of US banks toward the end of the global economic crisis in 2009 stress testing of large financial institutions has become the cornerstone of banking supervision worldwide The aim of the tests is to determine which banks are adequately capitalized under severe economic shocks and to order corrective measures for those that are vulnerable In Banking's Final Exam one of the world's leading experts on banking regulation concludes that the tests administered on both sides of the Atlantic suffer from fundamental weaknesses leading to a false sense of reassurance about the safety and soundness of the banking system Some weaknesses can be corrected within the existing bank capital regime but others will require bold reforms including higher minimum capital requirements for the largest and most systemically important banks The banking industry is likely to resist these reforms but this book explains why their objections do not hold water Financial Services and General Government Appropriations for Fiscal Year 2015 United States. Identification of high priority chemicals and other chemicals of concern has prompted a growing number of state and local governments as well as major companies to take steps beyond existing hazardous chemical federal legislation. Interest in approaches and policies that ensure that any new substances substituted for chemicals of concern are assessed as carefully and thoroughly as possible has also burgeoned. The overarching goal of these approaches is to avoid regrettable substitutions which occur when a toxic chemical is replaced by another chemical that later proved unsuitable because of persistence, bioaccumulation, toxicity or other concerns. Chemical alternative assessments are tools designed to facilitate consideration of these factors to assist stakeholders in identifying chemicals that may have the greatest likelihood of harm to human and ecological health and to provide guidance on how the industry may develop and adopt safer alternatives. A Framework to Guide Selection of Chemical Alternatives develops and demonstrates a decision framework for evaluating potentially safer substitute chemicals as primarily determined by human health and ecological risks. This new framework is informed by previous efforts by regulatory agencies, academic institutions and others to develop alternative assessment frameworks that could be operationalized. In addition to hazard assessments, the framework incorporates steps for life cycle thinking which considers possible impacts of a chemical at all stages including production, use and disposal, as well as steps for performance and economic assessments. The report also highlights how modern information sources such as computational modeling can supplement traditional toxicology data in the assessment process. This new framework allows the evaluation of the full range of benefits and shortcomings of substitutes and examination of tradeoffs between these risks and factors such as product functionality, product efficacy, process safety and resource use. Through case studies, this report demonstrates how different users in contrasting decision contexts with diverse priorities can apply the framework. This report will be an essential resource to the chemical industry, environmentalists, ecologists and state and local governments.

to the exact dates and counties of interviews we find that contemporaneous and cumulative exposure to air pollution impedes both verbal and math scores of survey subjects Interestingly the negative effect is stronger for men than for women Specifically the gender difference is more salient among the old and less educated in both verbal and math tests
