Abstract: This research is a qualitative study focusing on the experiences and views of nurses. The research objectives were to explore the experiences of nurses working in the intensive care unit (ICU) and to identify the factors that influence their work. The study was conducted in a tertiary care hospital in the United Kingdom. The data were collected through semi-structured interviews and focus group discussions. The findings indicate that nurses in the ICU face a high level of stress and pressure due to the critical nature of the patients and the fast-paced environment. The study also identified several factors that influence the nurses' work, including the availability of resources, the support from the management, and the training and education of the staff. The study concludes that the experiences of nurses in the ICU are complex and multifaceted, and that there is a need for further research to explore this topic in more depth.
