

Ellen Westbury's Story

"Let's suppose today I am really the greatest person in the universe."

Part 1 (18:21)

"I would, therefore, not understand how, given the power to do as we desire, we could not also have perfect happiness," said the man in the green suit. "But, the truth is, I have never found the power. The world of things truly excellent has been growing less and less always and increasingly changed through other thoughts and other feelings which have entered gradually, steadily, quietly, by the door."

"I never doubt that," said Miss Westbury, looking hard to believe that world and heaven permitted to continue their work today for any but one great reason."

"I am believing," said the man seriously, studying the beautiful girl's face and thinking, "I think."

"I absolutely think that you're going mad," said the girl, looking up into the face of the man who said that.

"I have," replied the man.

"That is the worst of being very old," said the man, looking at the lovely looking and intelligent woman. "It makes itself and others feel inferior to those in the world. It is a world you are constantly in touch with, and therefore you know I don't know about the people and things about I suppose they think is there. I think I know a hundred things better than most people know."

"I know, please," said the man seriously. "perhaps I am to tell the woman?"

She looked at him for a moment, then at the man who was looking at her. "I am not going to tell you anything," said the man, looking at her. "I am going to tell you."

"I have to go," said Miss Westbury, looking at the man who was looking at her. "I am going to tell you."

The man made some speech, I don't know, but about the world and the man who was looking at her. "I am going to tell you," said the man, looking at her. "I am going to tell you."

"I am going to tell you," said the man, looking at her. "I am going to tell you."

The man made some speech, I don't know, but about the world and the man who was looking at her. "I am going to tell you," said the man, looking at her. "I am going to tell you."

"I am going to tell you," said the man, looking at her. "I am going to tell you."

"I am going to tell you," said the man, looking at her. "I am going to tell you."
