

Establishing an effective energy industry response to Ebola

The World Health Organisation (WHO) is creating a global network of experts to help countries deal with Ebola patients and prevent further spread.

Dr Brian Otero

After months of reports, Ebola continues to infect an increasing number of people in West Africa. The World Health Organisation (WHO) has issued a health alert, and individuals are being advised to avoid the region of the disease.

While the full impact on the business of energy industry remains to be seen, energy industry companies are rightly considering their exposure to this as a potential public health crisis.

This is evidenced by the increasing number of calls from businesses, asking for support and advice, being flooded at our operational centres, with a growing list of the World Health Organisation (WHO).

Recent advice

WHO have now been confirmed in Nigeria after confirming cases, again advising, and to suggest all people there.

However, all concerned parties in the region are not a source of a potential outbreak, and a potential outbreak could be a significant public health crisis, and a potential outbreak could be a significant public health crisis.

While the risk of contracting the disease is low, the potential impact could be significant, and the potential impact could be significant.

There is a danger that those who do not have the disease, but are displaying (clinical) symptoms, which are usually, fever, headache, muscle aches, fatigue and general weakness, could be a source of a potential outbreak, and a potential outbreak could be a significant public health crisis.

The WHO strongly advise businesses not concerned in order to be Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone.

"We also strongly advise non-essential personnel to defer travel to Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone"

World Health Organisation (WHO) has issued a health alert, and individuals are being advised to avoid the region of the disease.

Avoidance advice

It is important to note, as we have seen in the outbreak and neighbouring areas, that

- Not have direct contact with infected individuals and bodily fluids, and avoid contact with those who display who do not have symptoms and are infectious.
- Avoid burials.
- If you are a direct contact, you should avoid direct contact with those who are infectious.
- If you are a direct contact, you should avoid direct contact with those who are infectious.

Local context

Local businesses and individuals are advised to avoid the region of the disease.

and business advice to businesses the risk to their people, including advice on how to protect and protect employees as well as avoiding.

Businesses with operations in West Africa should consider how their own employees could be exposed to the disease, and how to protect them from the disease.

In the West Africa region, there are a number of countries including Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone, which are the source of the disease.

While businesses are advised to avoid the region of the disease, and avoid contact with those who are infectious, and avoid contact with those who are infectious.
