Stockholder ReportB1: Corporate Strategic Thrust

Long-term perspective-defer profits in order to build a strong competitive position: Being a startup company in a segment that is not well known can be a challenge. But, For the Love of Bikes has decided from the beginning of its foundation to focus on long-term investing. This is because the business wants to gain a great reputation and be well established worldwide, and the strategy for this was to invest slowly and use its profits to continue building a strong competitive position. This allowed us to maintain financial stability throughout each quarter. The company slowly introduced new stores and slowly invested in 3D printers to increase Fixed Capacity as needed and fundings these investments with the ending cash funds from the previous quarters including retained earnings. This allowed For the Love of Bikes to avoid the need for emergency loans and even prevented bankruptcy. We also never had any leftover products and instead grew to understand the increasing demand of these products to make necessary changes to the price, safety, and needs of our customers. This allowed For the Love of Bikes to obtain a high percentage of the market shares and sales in the 3D bike segments. This also provided a financial advantage over other companies as each quarter, we continued observing the increased demand of our products and made changes to the tactical plan as needed.

Cautious but willing to take a chance: Being cautious when it came to risk taking was a corporate thrust that was financially beneficial to the business and of course the stockholders. The plan was to always have more than a minimum of $300,000 in the ending cash balance each
