

Table 2: Theory: Characteristics of Infection

These four exemplar studies demonstrate the characteristics of a group, allowing for a more detailed understanding of the role of individuals going through the experience. This can develop the researchers' overall understanding of the group, or even allow groups to address their own underlying concerns, as per studies.

Researchers often use the term 'infection' to describe a group of people who are experiencing a common problem or issue. This can be a physical problem, such as a disease or infection, or a psychological problem, such as a mental health issue. The term 'infection' is often used to describe a group of people who are experiencing a common problem or issue, and it is often used to describe a group of people who are experiencing a common problem or issue. For example, a group of people who are experiencing a common problem or issue, such as a disease or infection, can be described as a 'group of infected people'. This term is often used to describe a group of people who are experiencing a common problem or issue, and it is often used to describe a group of people who are experiencing a common problem or issue.

Researchers often use the term 'infection' to describe a group of people who are experiencing a common problem or issue.
