the Basis of Music Alexander John Ellis,1877 Volume of Proceedings of the Music Teachers' National Association ... Music Teachers National Association,1906 What Is Music? Isaac L. Rice,2015-01-19 From the INTRODUCTION The question
What is music is not new not recent not even modern it is as old as history itself In the remotest antiquity it has occupied the minds of thinkers and elicited curious ingenious and interesting fundamental theories I have therefore thought it advisable before setting forth my own views to give a r sum of the various theories current in ancient times as well as during the Middle Ages together with a not lengthy discussion on the theories of Euler Herbert Spencer and Helmholtz The question being in my estimation a cosmical one I believe that on the whole the ancients in considering so understood it better than most of the moderns who treat it too much from a sentimental subjective point of view Of course we must make allowance for the method of expression of the ancients their language was to a great extent symbolical and abounded even in what may be termed compound symbols that is to say an originally symbolical expression came to be so commonly understood that it was used to serve as the basis for still deeper symbols this is particularly the case with the number symbolism which at the outset was simple enough as may be learned from the interpretations given to it in Dacier s Life of Pythagoras but which later came to be so complicated that it is to us but little more than a number mysticism There are no commentaries incorporated in this little work and for two reasons first because they have no practical value secondly because the great aim of the ancient fundamental theories of music is easily perceived even without having a key to the mysterious expressions This aim is to show that music is a great part of the cosmos and not a human contrivance The ethical and psychological speculations of antiquity on the subject of music are by the way also deserving of our attention and in fact the sooner we follow the precepts of Plato and Aristotle deduced from those speculations the better will it be for our civilization In the mathematical and physical branches of the science we have of course completely overshadowed the ancients for since the publication of Newton s Principia there has hardly been a name of distinction among physicists and mathematicians but it is intimately connected with progress in acoustics and this is not strange for to use the language of Prof Leslie the doctrine of sound is unquestionably the most subtle and abstruse in the whole range of physical science It occurs to me that the reader might here ask me Why then do you hold our conception of music to be less true than that of the ancients If we are superior to them in knowledge why should we be inferior to them in comprehension These questions I think can be easily answered To paraphrase a sentence of Boetius we have numbers of instrumentalists and vocalists but musicians are rare in other words the art and the science of music have become distinct studies and in consequence our conception of music has become confined and imperfect In this little work then I have attempted to give the outlines of a cosmical theory of music based on the knowledge of our times and whether it be correct or not will be for an intelligent public to judge For my part if I have but succeeded in freeing the matter from the subjectivity by which it is now so enthralled and shown that it can and ought to be treated from a purely objective point of view I shall consider myself amply rewarded
