Abstract

Decision-makers in emergency settings need to employ the breadth of evidence available so as to inform critical judgments, yet the acute time pressure suggests that in some cases only partial information could be employed. Investigating this tension, the current study focuses on the usefulness of extraneous information that arrives from outside the organization and supplements the information that is available through local information systems. Namely, we explore the extent to which the use of Health Information Exchanges (HIEs)—a network that integrates patients' clinical information across medical organizations and points of care—facilitates diagnosis decisions in hospitals' emergency departments (EDs). Adopting the lens of cognitive decision-making theory, we advance hypotheses regarding the moderating effects of the tasks' cognitive requirements (diagnosis complexity) and clinicians' time availability (ED crowdedness) on the relation between the use of extraneous information (in the form of HIE data) and decision quality (ED revisit rate). Our empirical investigation employs complete field data collected from a network of hospitals, capturing over half-a-million patient ED encounters. The results reveal that, in general, ED clinicians' use of the HIE improves decision quality, as reflected in reduced patient revisits to the ED. However, when diagnosis complexity is low, this effect is reversed, such that HIE use is associated with increased ED revisit rates. Our discussion highlights the conditions under which extraneous information contributes to better decision-making and calls for a mindful use of interorganizational information exchanges in emergency settings.

1 | INTRODUCTION

It is widely believed that consulting multiple sources and bringing extra evidence helps make more informed, and thus superior, decisions (Klein et al., 1993). However, the literature in information systems (IS) and related fields maintains that this view is rather naïve, and that in reality the usefulness of information depends largely on its relevance to a particular context and the extent to which it fits the task (Goodhue & Thompson, 1995; Zigurs & Buckland, 1998). Taking this point further, the primary conjecture of this study is that, notwithstanding the overall usefulness of information, there may be certain situations where additional information might in fact hamper decision-making. We draw a distinction between on-scene information that is provided through local IS and extraneous information that is provided through interorganizational systems that gather information from external bodies (i.e., information coming from outside systems), focusing on the role of the latter in facilitating professionals' decision-making. Although not directly related to the local situation or decision, extraneous information often contains historical and related information that may provide

Too Much Information Cass R. Sunstein, 2022-02-15 The New York Times bestselling co author of Nudge explores how more information can make us happy or miserable and why we sometimes avoid it but sometimes seek it out How much information is too much Do we need to know how many calories are in the giant vat of popcorn that we bought on our way into the movie theater Do we want to know if we are genetically predisposed to a certain disease Can we do anything useful with next week's weather forecast for Paris if we are not in Paris In Too Much Information Cass Sunstein examines the effects of information on our lives Policymakers emphasize the right to know but Sunstein takes a different perspective arguing that the focus should be on human well being and what information contributes to it Government should require companies employers hospitals and others to disclose information not because of a general right to know but when the information in question would significantly improve people's lives Of course says Sunstein we are better off with stop signs warnings on prescription drugs and reminders about payment due dates But sometimes less is more What we need is more clarity about what information is actually doing or achieving

Too Much Information Dave Gorman, 2014-09-04 It's hard to imagine a world where anything you could possibly want to know about and everything you don't even know you want to know about isn't accessible 24 hours a day seven days a week with just a few taps of our fingers But that world once existed And Dave Gorman remembers it He remembers when there were only three channels on TV He remembers when mobile phones were the preserve of arrogant estate agents and yuppie twonks And he remembers when you had to unplug your phone to plug the computer into the landline in order to use the crippling slow internet Nowadays of course the world is full of people trying to tell us things So much so that we have taught our brains not to pay much attention After all click the mouse tap the screen flick the channel and it's on to the next thing But Dave Gorman thinks it's time to have a closer look to find out how much nonsense we tacitly accept Suspicious adverts baffling newspaper headlines fake twitter endless cat videos insane TV shows where the presenters ask the same questions over and over Can we even hear ourselves think over the rising din Or is there just too much information careful attention to the risk of bias in the translation process Vision 20 2020 & The Menace of Vandalism Stephen B. Oladipo, 2013-07-26 economic conditions have a vital role to play in people's experience and perceptions of a place. Such economic conditions affect nutritional levels, health, geographic mobility, educational attainment, and overall quality of life. Hence, the more reason youth and able working class men and women despise their home land Nigeria in search of a better life in other countries of the world. This is continually so because socioeconomic status affects almost all aspects of human life. In fact, the more reason for the incessant vandalism activities within the Nigerian state. This is why change is required; the need for some drastic economic measures; hence the relevance of Vision 2020 at this point in the history of the Nigerian economy may just have been the stitch in time to save ten. The book Vision 20 2020 and the Menace of Vandalism therefore is a policy guide and direction signaling material. It pictures this policy agenda called Vision 20 2020 of President Umar Musa Yar'adua as a dream towards attaining the nation's golden age which must not be aborted. It also tends to beckon the attention of the Nigerian government as well as her economic handlers who are saddled with strategic planning and responsibilities to see the country emerge as one of the 20 most economically viable nations among other countries of the world by year 2020 to the plaque called vandalism. While it strives at the same time to crave the indulgence of the relevant arm of the government to the fact that failure to muster and empower the concerned institution parastatal towards bringing the activities of vandals into check within the Nigerian state, untold limitations and hindrances may hijack the way to this fulfillment. It is of important therefore that this vision of our golden age as a people is not left to be choked in the fume of vandalism which has since rent the economic life of the country, especially more considering the capacity of the oil sector in the sustainability of the socio-political and economy of the state.
