Abstract:

Apparently, teachers' perceptions and practices play an important role in language teaching and learning, which has been recognized by Ellis (1999) and Krashen (1981). However, the purpose of the research is to find out if the review literature search has focused on this respect in teaching listening so far, especially in the Vietnamese context. The present study documents teachers' perceptions and practices towards using authentic materials in teaching listening in the foreign language centers in Can Tho City. The researcher used multi-methods of data collection i.e. questionnaire observation and interview, in which 45 teachers got involved. The findings show that most teachers had positive perceptions about using authentic materials in teaching listening in terms of resources for using authentic materials, criteria of using authentic materials, learners' levels and using authentic materials, Stages in the listening lesson of using authentic materials, benefits of using authentic materials, challenges of using authentic materials. The study also finds that factors such as teachers' different teaching contexts, educational backgrounds, teaching experiences, genders, and ages did not affect their perceptions. Significantly, many mismatches were found between teachers' perceptions and practices about teaching listening. The result of the study confirms that teachers' perceptions were partly reflected in their practices. Considering these findings, some implications were made.

The Affective Dimension in Second Language Acquisition Danuta Gabryś-Barker, Joanna Bielska, 2013-05-03 Affectivity is at the core of everything we do in life Thus its development is also central to learning acquisition and is important for educational contexts The studies presented in this volume consider the different contexts of language learning and examine different types of participants in this process Most of them look at a formal instruction context while others look beyond the classroom and even report on the author s own affectivity and its involvement in learning experiences Affectivity is discussed here in relation to learners but also to teachers in their own professional contexts of teaching foreign languages In the majority of cases affectivity is explored in the case of bilinguals but there are also articles which focus on multilingual language users and their affectivity as an evolving factor
