Air Force Magazine, 2006 Reluctant Power Rita Zajacz, 2019-08-06 How early twentieth century American policymakers sought to gain control over radiotelegraphy networks in an effort to advance the global position of the United States In Reluctant Power Rita Zajacz examines how early twentieth century American policymakers sought to gain control over radiotelegraphy networks in an effort to advance the global position of the United States Doing so she develops an analytical framework for understanding the struggle for network control that can be applied not only to American attempts to establish a global radio network in the early twentieth century but also to current US efforts to retain control of the internet In the late nineteenth century Britain was seen to control both the high seas and the global cable communication network under the sea By the turn of the twentieth century Britain's geopolitical rivals including the United States looked to radiotelegraphy that could circumvent Britain's dominance Zajacz traces policymakers attempts to grapple with both a new technology radiotelegraphy and a new corporate form the multinational corporation which managed the network and acted as a crucial intermediary She argues that both foreign policy and domestic radio legislation were shaped by the desire to harness radiotelegraphy for geopolitical purposes and reveals how communication policy and aspects of the American legal system adjusted to the demands of a rising power The United States was a reluctant power during the early twentieth century because policymakers were unsure that companies headquartered in the United States were sufficiently American and doubted that their strategies served the national interest
