The photograph shows a Pioneer hi-fi stereo system. On the left is a turntable with a clear dust cover. In the center is a cassette deck with a tape slot. To the right of the cassette deck is a large, rectangular amplifier or tuner unit. The entire system is housed in a dark, possibly black or dark wood-grain, cabinet. The Pioneer logo is visible on the front of the turntable and the cassette deck. The system is placed on a light-colored wooden surface.

The paper described is designed to be printed and assembled in the printed tabular form by the student themselves, and given, afterwards, to the child as a challenge, serving to measure their progress. Nevertheless, by having a record of the child's progress, the parent or supervisor can be enabled to observe the child's development, and to give more advice to the child.

Abstract: This chapter is an attempt to provide a critical analysis of the current state of research on the effects of the Internet on the family. The chapter is organized into three main sections. The first section discusses the impact of the Internet on the family's communication patterns. The second section discusses the impact of the Internet on the family's social support. The third section discusses the impact of the Internet on the family's problem-solving skills. The chapter concludes with a discussion of the implications of the research for family therapy.
