

How has Ayn Rand's work and thought shaped our cities?

The theory of objectivism was invented by the philosopher Ayn Rand who believes your highest moral purpose should be the pursuit of your own selfish happiness – this promotes the idea of individual liberty and encourages free markets.

Her belief that “Political freedom cannot exist without economic freedom; a free mind and a free market are corollaries” demonstrates the benefits of free markets within an economy. In Economics, a free market is an economic system in which the prices of goods and services are determined by supply and demand expressed by sellers and buyers – not through government intervention. Ayn Rand's idea of objectivism closely links to economists such as Adam Smith, who introduced the concept of the “invisible hand” which would allocate resources in society's best interests. This suggests consumers and producers are motivated by self-interest. For example, consumers want to maximise their benefit while producers are motivated to maximise profit. In a free market, consumers demand, and producers supply will lead to price levels being set at a point which benefits them both – this is called the price mechanism.

A Free-market economy results in the best outcome for society because of efficiency – any product can be bought and sold, only those of the best value will be in demand, so firms have an incentive to try to make goods in as efficient a way as possible. Therefore, firms can maximise profits (assuming firms are profit maximisers); this can be reinvested in the business and allow firms to offer better rewards for owners/shareholders which increases economic growth. This is more beneficial compared to planned economies as government owned firms have a lack of motivation to create products efficiently since they don't make profit.

Another benefit of a free market is that it encourages innovation and entrepreneurship. This links to individual liberty as it offers diverse perspectives and ideas. Encouraging cultural expressions can enhance society's intellect therefore leading to more ideas. Due to low barriers to entry and government intervention, firms are more willing to innovate current ideas or create new products to maximise profits. By increasing innovation, there is a greater consumer choice due to the fact there are more goods and services available to them. This will increase consumption which will mean firms have to expand as their sales revenue increases. As a result, unemployment falls due to hiring more workers, therefore leading to individuals receiving more incomes which will increase spending further and increase consumption. This is commonly known as the accelerator effect.

Free markets promote international trade and globalization, leading to increased economic interactions among nations. Innovating products will often encourage foreign consumers to buy these products which increases sales revenue for firms. This will increase exports and additionally decrease imports as domestic consumers are more likely to purchase from their own country. As exports are a positive component of AD and imports being a negative component, AD will increase resulting in economic growth which would not be achieved through government intervention in a planned economy.

Individual liberty results in social progress. Cultures that place a high importance on individual freedom which are frequently more adaptive and progressive. It may result in reforms and adjustments that advance social justice and equality. By lowering inequality, health and wellbeing of workers will improve which may improve productivity of the workforce since motivation and passion
