² These findings will also benefit those who are looking for ways to improve the quality of their work and the quality of their lives.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group was instructed to continue with their current level of activity. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly improved the subjects' physical fitness, as measured by heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index. The walking program also significantly improved the subjects' psychological health, as measured by self-reported stress, anxiety, and depression. The walking program was well-tolerated and had no adverse effects. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
