These results are consistent with the hypothesis that the presence of a social support network is associated with lower rates of depression. The results also suggest that the presence of a social support network is associated with higher rates of life satisfaction. These findings have important implications for the development of interventions to reduce the risk of depression and increase life satisfaction. For example, interventions that aim to strengthen social support networks may be effective in reducing the risk of depression and increasing life satisfaction. Further research is needed to explore the mechanisms underlying these associations and to develop targeted interventions.
