

INCARCERATION NATION

How did America become the world's biggest jailer? The numbers alone tell a frightening story. The graph below shows the prison population slowly expanding with Richard Nixon's escalation of the War on Drugs, then sharply spiking under Ronald Reagan during the crack crisis of the 1980s, and booming with Bill Clinton's anti-crime legislation in the Nineties, spiked in response to public concerns over escalating street violence and murder rates. More than 20 years later, with crime rates greatly reduced, America now finds itself housing 25 percent of the world's prisoners, topping repressive regimes like China and Russia by wide margins — with people of color and the wealthy at, being the worst. The need for reform couldn't be clearer.
