Sage urged PM to order a harsher lockdown

Johnson overruled scientists who called for measures tougher than three-tier system

By Emma Duncanson
 and Catherine Rayner

Prime Minister Boris Johnson overruled government scientists who urged a much tougher lockdown to bring the coronavirus pandemic under control.

The Prime Minister's decision to reject a three-tier system of restrictions, which would have seen the country divided into three zones of increasing strictness, was a major blow to the government's plan to control the virus.

Johnson's decision, which came after a meeting of his cabinet, was seen as a sign that he was determined to keep the country open as much as possible, despite the risk of a second wave of infections. The decision was also seen as a sign that Johnson was listening to the views of his political allies, who were concerned that a three-tier system would be too restrictive for the economy.

Mr Johnson said the new system would simplify the rules and ensure that the government could respond quickly to any changes in the virus's spread. He said the three-tier system was "too complex" and "too restrictive" for the country.

The three-tier system, which was proposed by a group of government scientists, would have seen the country divided into three zones of increasing strictness. Zone 1 would have been the least restrictive, with only a few restrictions. Zone 2 would have been more restrictive, with more restrictions. Zone 3 would have been the most restrictive, with the most restrictions. The zones would have been based on the number of new cases in each area.

Boris Johnson overruled the three-tier system of a Downing Street group conference last night and talks with local leaders about which tier their area is placed in

Sunak leaves little room for doubt over who is pulling the strings

Analysis

By Camilla Tompkins

Boris Johnson has been spreading the message that he is the one pulling the strings. But his actions suggest that he is not the only one in charge.

Bank raises prospect of negative interest rates

The Bank of England has raised the prospect of negative interest rates, which would mean that savers would have to pay to hold their money in the bank. The bank said it was considering this option as a way to stimulate the economy.

Premier League clubs to reject 'Big Picture'

The Premier League clubs have rejected the 'Big Picture' proposal, which would have seen the league's revenue shared more evenly between the clubs. The clubs said the proposal was unfair and would harm the league's financial health.

Young white workers at bottom of pay scale

A new study has found that young white workers are at the bottom of the pay scale, earning less than other groups. The study said that this was due to a combination of factors, including discrimination and lack of experience.
